LKIE WALL
John Wilkie moved to the Wairarapa with his family around 1860. He farmed at Greytown, building a cottage for his growing family. Gradually the house was extended, with the wall section displayed here dating from the late 1870s. It is made from locally milled tōtara.
THE NEWSPAPERS USED TO LINE THE WALL TELL MANY INTERESTING STORIES.
During the 19th century Greytown had three newspapers. The Wairarapa Mercury began publication in 1867. It was taken over and renamed The Wairarapa Standard in 1872. The Wairarapa Standard continued through to 1935 when its premises were destroyed by fire.

Turning Waterway into Highways
Waka tiwai (river canoes) like these were used by Māori to navigate rivers and lakes in south Wairarapa prior to the road and bridge building that came with European settlement.
